To Whom It May Concern,

Allegiance Moving Company, Inc has served the public since 2001. When the business received its authority in 2003 from the public service commission we have never had a complaint and always remained compliant. The public service commission has never had to even call us, audit us, or do any type of investigations on us in over 10 years until now.

Phillip and Lane Boris operated Allegiance Moving Company, Inc together from 2001 until 2013 together. Phillip focusing on the "moving" part of the business and Lane focusing on the "management/ legal " part of the business. Lane and Phillip divorced in April of 2013, Phillip gained sole ownership and operations of the business legally.

Phillip had a hard time handling all aspects of the business on his own. He actually didn't even know how to do the things that Lane did. Including filing insurance, balancing a checkbook, filings, etc. Lane had done this for the business for so many years, he tired to keep everything organized and in tact.

Some of the problems that you have seen is a direct result of Phillip trying to carry the business on without the help of Lane. Missing customer's furniture, unfilled insurance, not being able to follow behind employees.

Phillip has come to realize that he can't handle the business alone, and has hired a bookkeeper to assist him in keeping things paid, filed, and organized. The bookkeeper will all handle all bills of landing, inventory, employee records, invoicing, filings, etc. This will allow Phillip to concentrate on the "moving operations" at Allegiance Moving Company, Inc.

Allegiance requests that the public service commission lift the suspended authority and not revoke the authority of the business for the said reasons above. We do request that the public service commission put the business under a probation period for a period of 6 months so that we can prove to the Public Service commission that the business is Fit, Willing and Able and in compliance in all aspects to service the public correctly.

Allegiance is unable to hire a Lawyer to represent the business at this time because of financial reasons. We have been unable to perform moves because of our license being suspended and have had an immediate significant loss in income.

Thank You
